Why Does the World Suppress Truth and Label It as "Conspiracy"?

Sixbert SANGWA • October 18, 2024

In today's world, the struggle to discern truth from deception is more pronounced than ever. As societies grow more interconnected, we face a constant stream of information, much of which is curated, controlled, and filtered to fit certain narratives. Many Christians believe this aligns with biblical warnings about the end times, where the powers of darkness work tirelessly to obscure its truth. Jesus called out Satan's nature plainly: "He was a murderer from the beginning and does not stand in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he tells a lie, he speaks from his own nature, because he is a liar and the father of lies" (John 8:44). Just as the devil deceives, those influenced by his schemes seek to spread lies and silence those who speak the truth. This article explores how secret societies and global elites strategically suppress truth, control narratives, and label dissenting voices as "misinformation" or "conspiracy theories."

The Strategy of Suppression: How the Truth Is Stifled

The world's power structures have long recognized the power of controlling information. In our digital age, this tactic has become even more pronounced. Governments, corporations, and media conglomerates decide which narratives reach the public and which are deemed "dangerous" or "unfounded." This strategy allows those in power to maintain their influence and control over society, while stifling voices that challenge their agendas.

An emerging tool in this effort is artificial intelligence (AI). The same technology that powers innovations in medicine and industry is increasingly being used to filter and block content online. As AI grows more advanced, it is being leveraged to silence unwanted voices, labeling dissent as "misinformation" or even "hate speech." Many social media platforms, under the influence of powerful entities, use AI to restrict the visibility of content that contradicts the mainstream narrative. This effectively creates a digital environment where only approved narratives can thrive. Such control reflects the biblical warning about those who "call evil good and good evil, who put darkness for light and light for darkness" (Isaiah 5:20).

The rise of skepticism toward alternative viewpoints is also notable. Even in the presence of substantial evidence, dissenting perspectives are often dismissed as irrational or paranoid until they are validated by an official source. This mindset is particularly dangerous because it places ultimate authority in the hands of those who may not have our best interests at heart. The Bible instructs Christians to "let your 'yes' mean 'yes,' and your 'no' mean 'no'" (Matthew 5:37). Yet, in today's culture, even a clear "yes" or "no" must be approved by those in power before it is deemed credible.

The Role of Secret Societies: Illuminati, the Elite, and Hidden Agendas

One of the most contentious subjects is the influence of secret societies like the Illuminati. While some consider these discussions as mere fantasy, there are undeniable connections between such organizations and the manipulation of global events. The Illuminati, which originated as a group dedicated to the promotion of the so-called Enlightenment ideals (knowledge given by Lucifer), is widely believed to have evolved into a network that seeks to control global affairs from behind the scenes. Critics suggest that this control is wielded through influence over financial institutions, political figures, and media conglomerates.

This manipulation is consistent with the warnings in Ephesians, where the Apostle Paul wrote, "For our struggle is not against flesh and blood, but against the rulers, against the authorities, against the powers of this dark world and against the spiritual forces of evil in the heavenly realms" (Ephesians 6:12). The agenda of these secret societies is often linked to the promotion of ideologies that contradict biblical teachings, including the push for a one-world government, erosion of traditional values, and the undermining of Christian faith.

The financial influence of these elites is also evident in the relationship between the United States and global financial institutions. While the U.S. is often perceived as a wealthy and prosperous nation, it is heavily indebted to international banking systems that many claim are controlled by powerful elites. This debt creates leverage over national policies and societal direction. The suppression of this truth allows those in power to continue dictating the narrative without facing accountability. This aligns with the broader strategy of maintaining control over populations by keeping them ignorant of the true nature of global power structures.

Alice Bailey's Ten Point Plan: An Agenda Against Christian Values

Alice Bailey, a pivotal figure in the New Age movement, proposed a "Ten Point Plan" that sought to transform societal norms by gradually eroding Christian values. The plan calls for the breakdown of traditional family structures, the promotion of alternative lifestyles, and the removal of Christianity from public spaces. While these ideas may appear to advocate for a more inclusive society, they often work against the moral foundation provided by the Bible.

One of the tenets of Bailey's plan was to "reduce parental authority over the children," which we see reflected in modern policies (labeled as children's rights, positive parenting, etc.) that undermine the rights of parents to guide their children's education and upbringing. This is part of a broader effort to ensure that children are indoctrinated with secular and materialistic values from a young age. As Scripture warns, "Train up a child in the way he should go; even when he is old he will not depart from it" (Proverbs 22:6). However, when the influence of godly parents is removed, children become more susceptible to ideologies that contradict biblical principles.

The Bible also emphasizes the importance of disciplining children, which includes physical correction when necessary. Proverbs 13:24 states, "The one who will not use the rod hates his son, but the one who loves him disciplines him diligently" (Proverbs 13:24). Similarly, Proverbs 23:13-14 advises, "Don't withhold discipline from a child; if you beat him with a rod, he will not die. If you beat him with a rod, you will save him from Sheol" (Proverbs 23:13-14). These verses underscore the biblical view of parental authority and discipline, which stands in stark contrast to many modern parenting philosophies.

This agenda is further propagated through media, education systems, and political discourse, which increasingly dismiss Christian perspectives as outdated or intolerant. When Christians speak out against this, they are often labeled as bigots or extremists, further alienating them from mainstream dialogue. Such suppression is not accidental but is part of a strategic effort to align society with values that reject God's truth, replacing it with human-centered ideologies.

Real-World Examples of Suppressed Truths

The history of suppressed truth is marked by individuals who faced severe consequences for exposing hidden agendas. Gary Webb, a journalist who uncovered links between the CIA and drug trafficking, exemplifies this. After publishing his findings, Webb faced intense criticism and career ruin. In 2004, he was found dead with two gunshot wounds to the head, officially ruled a suicide—a conclusion many dispute (Goodman, 2014). His story underscores the risks faced by those who challenge powerful interests.

Dr. David Kelly, a British weapons inspector, questioned the government's claims about weapons of mass destruction in Iraq. Shortly after his whistleblowing, he was found dead under suspicious circumstances, officially deemed a suicide but met with widespread skepticism (Norton-Taylor, 2003). These cases form part of a pattern where those who challenge established narratives face dire consequences.

The controversial death of Jeffrey Epstein in a high-security prison is another notable example. Epstein, with extensive connections to global elites, was implicated in a vast network of illicit activities. His death, ruled a suicide under suspicious circumstances, has fueled speculation that it was orchestrated to protect influential figures (Weiser et al., 2019). These incidents highlight the extreme measures potentially taken to silence those who threaten to expose powerful interests.

The list of alleged cover-ups and manipulated narratives is extensive. For instance, some researchers argue that Adolf Hitler may not have died in a bunker as officially reported, but escaped to South America. This theory gained traction after the declassification of certain CIA documents (CIA, 2007). Similarly, questions have been raised about the circumstances surrounding Osama Bin Laden's reported death in 2011, with some narrating about alternative scenarios (Engel, 2011). While these claims are often dismissed as speculative, they highlight a recurring pattern: when truth potentially threatens powerful interests, it can become subject to obfuscation or misrepresentation.

The Suppression of Truth through AI and Digital Censorship

With the rise of artificial intelligence, the ability to control information has reached new heights. Algorithms now determine what content is visible and what is hidden, all under the guise of "combating misinformation." While AI has the potential to enhance human knowledge, it is increasingly being used as a tool to filter out dissenting voices. This is evident in the way social media platforms employ AI to shadow-ban or deplatform users who share content that contradicts official narratives.
Critics like journalist Glenn Greenwald have highlighted how this form of censorship is often used to suppress inconvenient truths and limit the reach of independent voices (Greenwald, 2020). As AI becomes more sophisticated, it is being used not only to censor content but also to manipulate public opinion by promoting certain topics while burying others. This approach undermines the biblical call to seek truth openly, as "the wisdom that comes from heaven is first of all pure; then peace-loving, considerate, submissive, full of mercy and good fruit, impartial and sincere" (James 3:17). A world where AI controls the flow of information lacks the sincerity and openness that the Bible calls for.

In an age where critical thinking and freedom of speech are touted as fundamental rights, it is curious that questioning the mainstream narrative often leads to censorship or social ostracization. Why is there such resistance to open debate and inquiry? The answer may lie in recognizing that these strategies align with the nature of the enemy—Satan, desire to maintain control through deceptions. When people begin to question, they break free from the influence of propaganda, as Scripture encourages us to do: "Test all things. Hold on to what is good" (1 Thessalonians 5:21). Jesus taught His followers, "You will know the truth, and the truth will set you free" (John 8:32). This promise of freedom through truth is precisely what those under Luciferian influence seek to prevent. Suppressing dissent ensures that the masses remain compliant and uninformed, unable to challenge the existing power structures. The goal is to keep humanity enslaved in ignorance, perpetuating a version of reality that aligns with Lucifer's objectives. But what if people learn to challenge the global rhetoric? What if we all listened to the humble voices of the faithful who risk their lives to offer alternative perspectives?

Global Trends and Hidden Agendas: Climate, Health, and Control

Several global issues have been used to push hidden agendas under the guise of progress. Climate change is frequently presented as an existential crisis caused by human activity, particularly carbon emissions. While the environment should indeed be cared for, many argue that the emphasis on carbon reduction obscures discussions about geoengineering and weather manipulation. These technologies, like cloud seeding and HAARP (High-Frequency Active Auroral Research Program), have been pointed to as tools that can potentially manipulate weather patterns (Caldeira et al., 2019). By controlling the debate, powerful interests ensure that questions about these controversial technologies remain in the realm of conspiracy theories, thus deflecting scrutiny away from their actions.

The COVID-19 pandemic provides another example of how narratives can be tightly controlled. Early claims that the virus could have originated in a lab were dismissed as conspiracy theories, only for some of these theories to gain credibility later (Ryan, 2021). Similarly, questions about the efficacy and safety of certain vaccines, or concerns about digital health passports, were often met with swift censorship on digital platforms. Even the mention of potential adverse reactions was sometimes suppressed (Berenson, 2022).

Claims that the Covid-19 virus was spread through contaminated facemasks or that some vaccines contained hidden tracking technology were quickly labeled as misinformation (Spring, 2020). Yet, it is not unreasonable to consider the possibility of manipulation when the stakes involve global control, public compliance, and immense financial interests. Even the practice of encouraging excessive water consumption has been questioned as chemicals in processed water could be harmful (Peckham & Awofeso, 2014). These perspectives are frequently dismissed without thorough investigation, further fueling doubts about the transparency of those in power.

For many, this reflects a broader agenda to control populations, not just through health measures but through digital surveillance and restrictions on movement. Such efforts echo the biblical warnings about a time when no one could buy or sell unless they had the mark of the beast (Revelation 13:17).

The Christian Response to Deception and Oppression

In the face of such widespread suppression, what should be the Christian response? We are called to be discerning, to "test all things. Hold on to what is good" (1 Thessalonians 5:21). This means questioning narratives, seeking evidence, and standing firm in the truth, even when it is unpopular or dangerous. While the world may dismiss our concerns as paranoia or conspiracy, our allegiance is to a higher authority who calls us to be "as shrewd as serpents and as innocent as doves" (Matthew 10:16).
Oppression and terrorism are not new tactics; they are the ancient tools of Satan to instill fear, suppress truth, and keep people from the light of God. Yet, Christians have a mandate to resist this darkness and to expose it with the light of Christ. We are called to be "the light of the world. A city set on a hill cannot be hidden" (Matthew 5:14). This is why, even in a world dominated by deceptive narratives and powerful interests, we must stand firm in our faith and continue to seek and speak the truth.

Conclusion: Encouraging a Discerning Mindset in a Deceptive World

As we navigate the complexities of a world filled with lies and half-truths, Christians must remain steadfast in their commitment to truth. The Bible repeatedly warns about deception in the last days, urging believers to stay vigilant and grounded in the Word of God. "Do not be conformed to this age, but be transformed by the renewing of your mind, so that you may discern what is the good, pleasing, and perfect will of God" (Romans 12:2).
In a world where hidden agendas and deceptive narratives thrive, it is essential that we question the information presented to us, seek God's wisdom, and boldly speak the truth—even when it comes at great personal risk. By doing so, we reflect the light of Christ in a world desperate for clarity and hope. Let us not be swayed by the voices that seek to suppress, but instead, hold fast to the timeless truth of God's Word. In doing so, we fulfill our role as witnesses to a world in need of redemption.
